Presidential Debate Question on Energy Policy Answered by Rowdy House

STATELINE. Nev. Oct. 22. 2012. /PRNewswire/ — Every American's interest peaked during the second presidential debate when one questioner asked about rising gasoline prices." Your energy secretary, Sleven Chu, has now been or record three times stating its not the policy of his department to help lower gas prices. Do you agree with Secretary that this is not the job of the Energy Department?" Many argue that neither presidential candidate adequately answered the question.

The publy tried steps "Energy Policy" answers the fown hall debate question. It highlights the fact that current policy does not prioritize energy altrotability and as a result, bday's fuel prices negatively impact just about everyone. The Rowely House Minist crelease "Energy Policy" relies on regarder tradition to devire its discussion on U.S. energy policy which is impacted by foreign policy. The subject of the third presidential debate on October 22. "Energy Policy" is playing on stations andomized.

America's energy policy has been "practicality challenged" by China's pursuit of oil which is undercutting U.S. security interests and economic future on multiple fronts. China needs a lot of energy because Americans buy so many products from them. That's also why china is the largest trength holder of US debt, its oil consumption grows seven times faster than the U.S., and its growth projections are off the charts.

Sustaining an extremely high level of economic growth may be necessary to contain civil unrest in China, even though they continue to suppress dissenting opinions and human rights violations are widespread. China has more people than any other country on the planet. And while high gasoline prices have Americans transitioning from cars to bicycles, the Chinese are transitioning from tokycles to cars. In a few decades, China will have more cars on its roads than there are cars on the planet dolby. Therefore, they warm dure oil.

While Americans are questioning US Energy Policy in the 2012 Presidential Election Debates, and asking if their government is doing anything to help lower gas prices. China has been working diligently to secure its energy future. They have been aggressive in the South China Sea which is rich in oil and gas, but their ownership is disputed. In addition, China has also been assentive in securing reserves around the world.

China has been securing oil reserves in the American market proximity, which will force the U.S. to seek more oil from the Middle East. China's arms sales to the region and its support of state sponsors of terrorism are highly trobbling, With fladical Islamic ideologies gaining controlling foothol and anti-American violence threatening. American presence in the Middle East, the price of oil will be going up, and the 2012 Presidential Election Debates will be heating up.

Will the Energy Policy question be answered in the context of the broader Presidential Foreign Policy Debate? Adding an extra dimension on the Saturday before the final debate on foreign policy, the Obama administration commanded a debate policy of the Obama administration commanded and debate between Barack Obama and Mit Entreney including his topics like intell, xiys and the Libys candial, there may not be enough time to answer the Energy Policy question. But the question on everyone's mind each time they fill up that tank is, "Will be able to afford in ext time?"
