Presidential Debate Question on Energy Policy Answered by Rowdy House

STATELINE. Nev., Oct. 22, 2012. PRINopursitor — Every American's Instruct pasked during the second precidential debate when one questioner asked about rising gasoline prices. "Your energy secretary, Steven Chu, has now been on record three times stating ris not the policy of his department to help lower gas prices. Do you garee with Secretary that this is not the job of the Energy Department?" Many argue that neither presidential candidate adequately answered the question.

The aptly timed song "Energy Policy" answers the town hall debate question. It highlights the fact that current per does not prioritize energy affordability and as a result, today's beit prices negatively impact just about everyone. Rowly House Busing release "Energy Policy" relies on regisear tradiation to deliver its discussion on U.S. energy privation. It is impacted by foreign policy: the subject of the third presidential debate on October 22. "Energy Policy" playing on stallation anatomized.

America's energy policy has been "practicality challenged" by China's pursuit of oil which is undercutting U.S. securitinterests and economic future on multiple fronts. China needs a lot of energy because Americans buy so many products from them. That's also why China is the largest foreign holder of US debt, its oil consumption grows seven times faster than the U.S., and its growth projections are off the chairs.

Sustaining an extremely high level of economic growth may be necessary to contain civil unrest in China, even though they continue to suppress dissenting opinions and human rights violations are widespread. China has more people than any other country on the glanet. And while high gasoline prices have Americans transforting from cars to bicycles, the Chinese are transforting from bicycles to cars. In a lev decades, China with have more cars on its roads than there are cars on the planet flodby. Therefore, hely ward more oil.

While Americans are questioning US Energy Policy in the 2012 Presidential Election Debates, and asking if their government is doing anything to help lower gas prices. China has been working diligently to secure its energy future. They have been aggressive in the South China Sea within is nich in oil and gas, but their ownership is disputed. In addition, China has also been assertive in securing reserves around the world.

China has been securing oil reserves in the American market proximity, which will force the U.S. to seek more oil from the Middle East. China's arms sales to the region and its support of state sponsors of terrorsm are highly troubling, with nadical Islamic ideologies gaining a controlling foothfold and anti-American vidence treaterient, American presence in the Middle East, the price of oil will be going up, and the 2012 Presidential Election Debates will be healing up.

Will the Energy Policy question be answered in the context of the broader Presidential Foreign Policy Debate? Adding an exit admension on the Salurday before the final debate on foreign policy, the Obama administration commanded a debate between Baracki Chama and Mitt Romey including high of topics: lib lent, Ny's and the Libys candial, there may not be enough time to answer the Energy Policy question. But the question on everyone's mind each time they fill up there tanks it, Yill the able to afford in end time?
